War is not a field of poppies as so many seem to think.

War is death and destruction, a charnel hose of immense proportions, full of grotesque mutilation and suffering. Many see it as a rite of passage into adulthood where the basest of humankind's instincts are given full rein. Some may bemoan their lot, but none the less willingly go off to war. The puppet masters sit in their cosy bunkers wining and dining themselves while elsewhere untold numbers suffer and starve.
